The Story of a Doctor's Wife

Everything Ends As It Ought, In Peace By THE WIFE,

word from Peter. He must have my letter-why did he ignore it-why no telegram or even long distance no telegram or even long distance phone message? In spite of the finality of my letter I knew I had hoped somehow vaguely and desperately that Peter would protest—that he would not let me go without a word.

If the day had been agony, the long night of sleeplessness was worse. In the morning I recoiled in horror from my own face. 'You're thirty, Connie Drayton.' I said to myself, "and you don't look much under 50. A year from now you'll look like an old woman whose life story is over—well, it is."

At the breakfast table, Betty, who was still a little too weak to endure much exertion, asked me to help her with her shopping. She and mother and I set out on separate lists of errands. Somehow in the shops I found a queer half-solace from pain. A certain numbness held the part of my brain that was not occupied in buying silk stockings and negligees and boudoir caps to match. I managed to drink some cocoa and est a sandwich at moon and then went on with a furry of purthem to form anything more than just the words, "Yes, it's I."

"Connie, I've been going mad, trying to get you for the four hours since my train got in. I started an hour after I got your letter. Will you see me?"

"Yes, oh, yes. Oh, I'm so gind you're here-I'm so gind." And the sobs crept into my voice though I tried to keep them back.

here—I'm so giad." And the sobs crept into my voice though I tried to keep them back.

"You're giad?" came back Peter's voice. "You're giad?" came back Peter's voice. "You're giad, Connie? I thought you hated me. I thought the train would never get me to you. I thought the world had come to an end. I'll take a taxi and be there in 15 minutes. I won't come in. I can't stand seeing all your people—congratulating 'em and saying the things I'd have to. Put on your hat and 'um down to the corner to meet me. Fifteen minutes. Connie. Thank God, you're glad!"

I didn't explain to mother or Betty or Jim. I just rushed to my own room and flung myself on my knees. I asked nothing more of heaven or earth. A miracle had happened—somehow after all the mistakes and blunders of five bitter years, Feter still loved me.

First I prayed reverently and thankfully—and then (being a woman). I got up to wash my tearstained face and try to make myself attractive for the eyes of the man I loved Back from my mirror two great amber-colored eyes shone on me. The clear transparency of my skin was flushed with pluk. I looked on the radiant face of a girl of 20!

"Whom God hath Joined together, let no man put asunder," I murmured joyfoily. Perhaps I could not give Peter loved him and I would try to live up to my own ideal of wifehood. "Sweet-heart, comrade and almost mother;" and to be all he wanted me to be! Remembers What Marian Told Her.

I remembered what Marian had told se, "For heaven's sake, Connie, go come and get him—he had come for me! There was one giorious thing that come and get him—he had come for me! There was one giorious thing that must hold me forever happy at his side—no matter what of disappointment and pain the human relationship of husband and wife must bring. It was this—Peter trusted me! * * * * * Without one word to explain my frenzied letter begging Jim to come to me, or my still more frenzied letter to Peter bidding him go from me, my husband had come back to me. He had understood much—and had forgotten what he could not understand. All through my life, I would remember and try to be worthy of that.

I closed the door on all my petty childishness, and a woman full-grown went out to meet Pettr Drayton.
Day was fading—but even in the dimmess of twillight I could see on Peter's face the tender smile I loved so well. And there with all the world to see, Peter took me in his arms and held me close for a second. * * And then we stepped into the waiting laxi.

knew never would let me go again.

"I've missel you so. * " I've missel you so. * " I've manted you. How could you leave me alone so long? Women are cold-you've hurt me, Connie."

My arms went around my husband's neck and I litted my face to his.

"Peter—forgive me—I've hurt my-aelf too. * " Do you love me—just me—in spite of it?"

Peter laughed in glorious triumph.
"Counie, little sweetheart—little idiot, don't you know who the One Woman is?"
